

ILIKEITDEEP · A GUIDED JOURNAL

Let It Out

A Journal for Everything You've Been Holding In

printable pdf · 18 guided questions · no filter required

WELCOME

Before You Begin

You've been holding it together. For work, for family, for the group chat. Smiling with a chest full of things you never let out.

This journal is the one place you don't have to hold it.

The rules here are gloriously simple: no filter, no fixing, no being fair, no watching your language. The page doesn't need you to be reasonable. It needs you to be honest.

Rage, cry, complain, confess. This is the release valve.
Let. It. Out.

STARTING POINT

Open the Valve

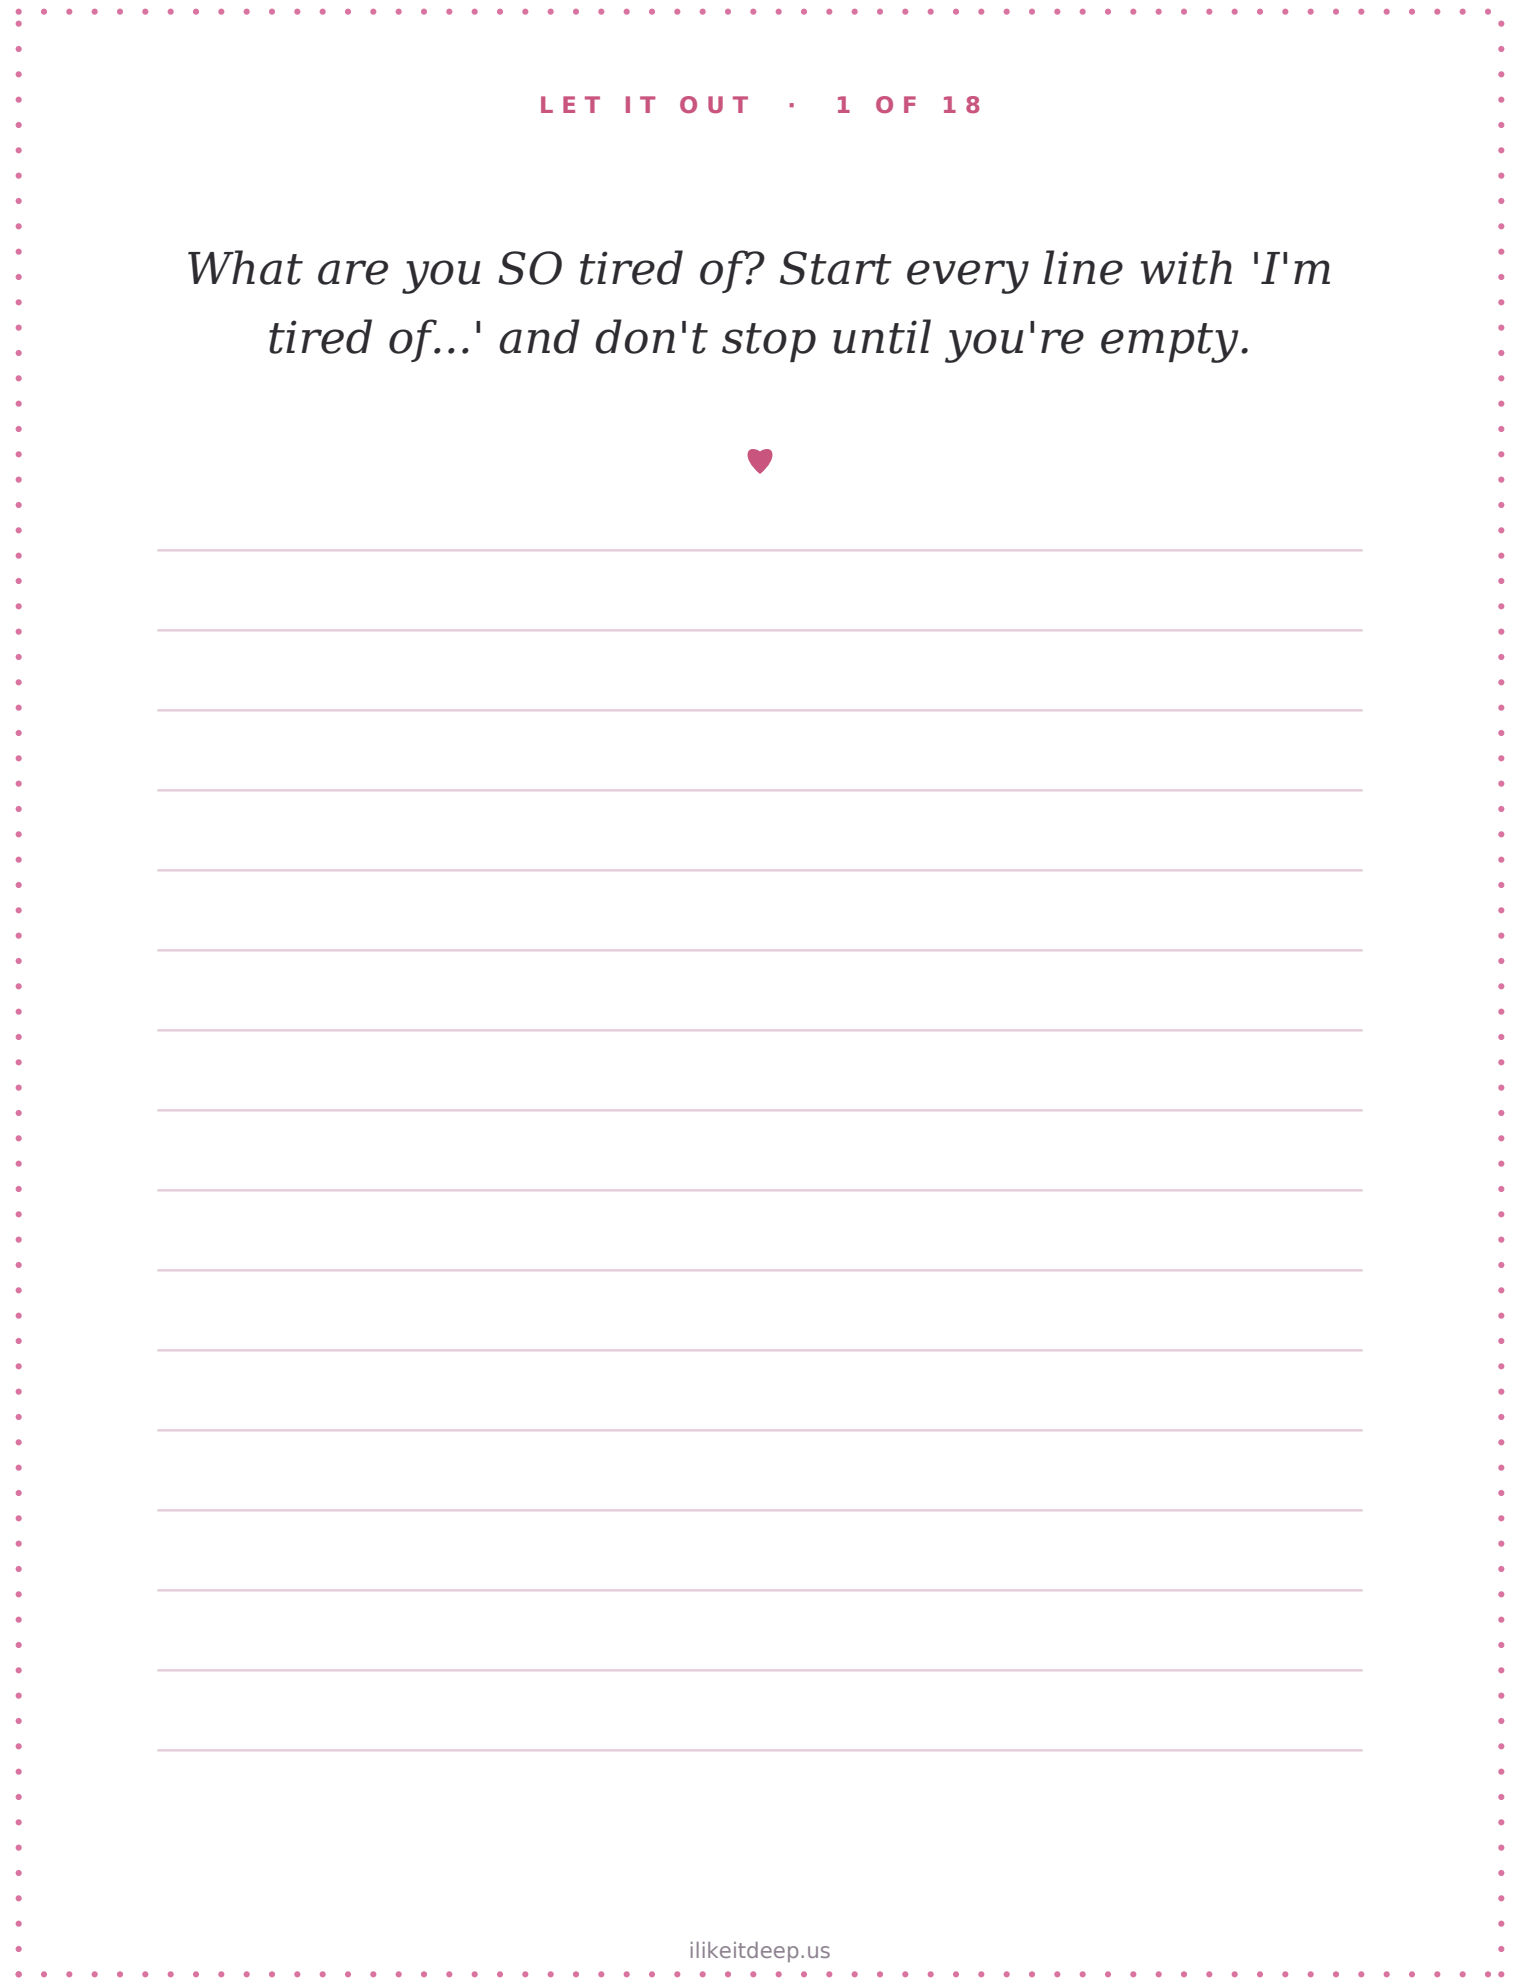

Don't think — just dump. Write everything sitting on your chest right now, in whatever order it comes out. Messy counts double.

PART ONE

The Pressure

*First, admit how much you've been carrying.
All of it. Out loud, on paper.*

[illegible][illegible]

LET IT OUT · 2 OF 18

Who or what is currently on your last nerve — and what would you say if there were zero consequences?

ilikeitdeep.us

[illegible]

What have you been pretending is fine that is absolutely not fine?

[illegible][illegible]

[illegible][illegible]

What would you scream from a rooftop if screaming were allowed? Write it in big letters if you need to.

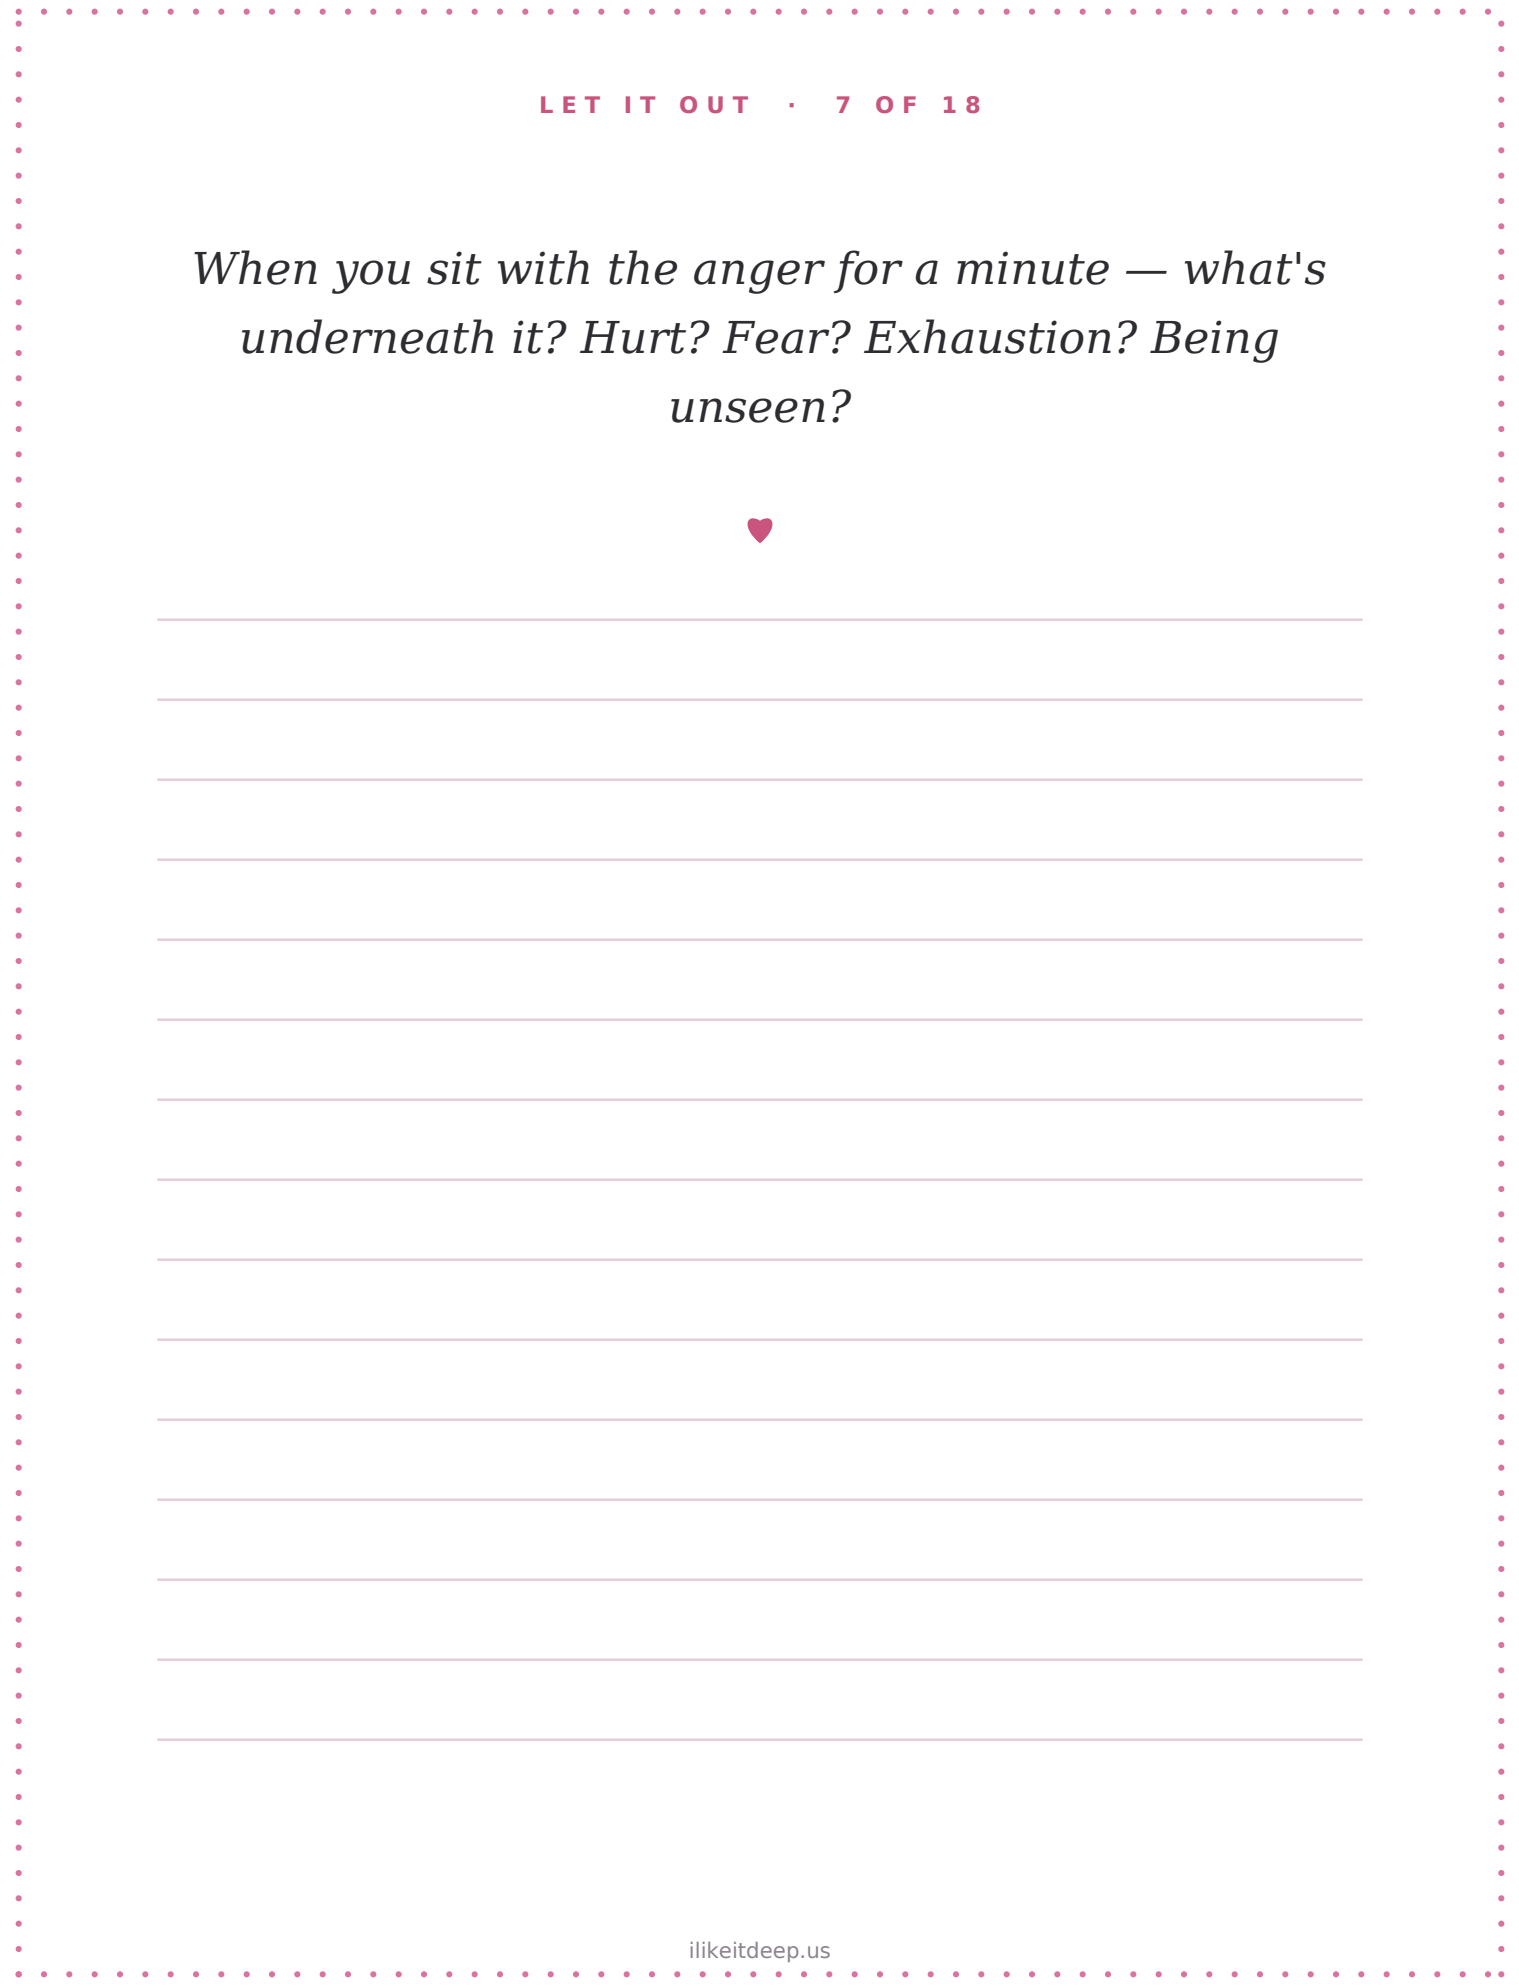

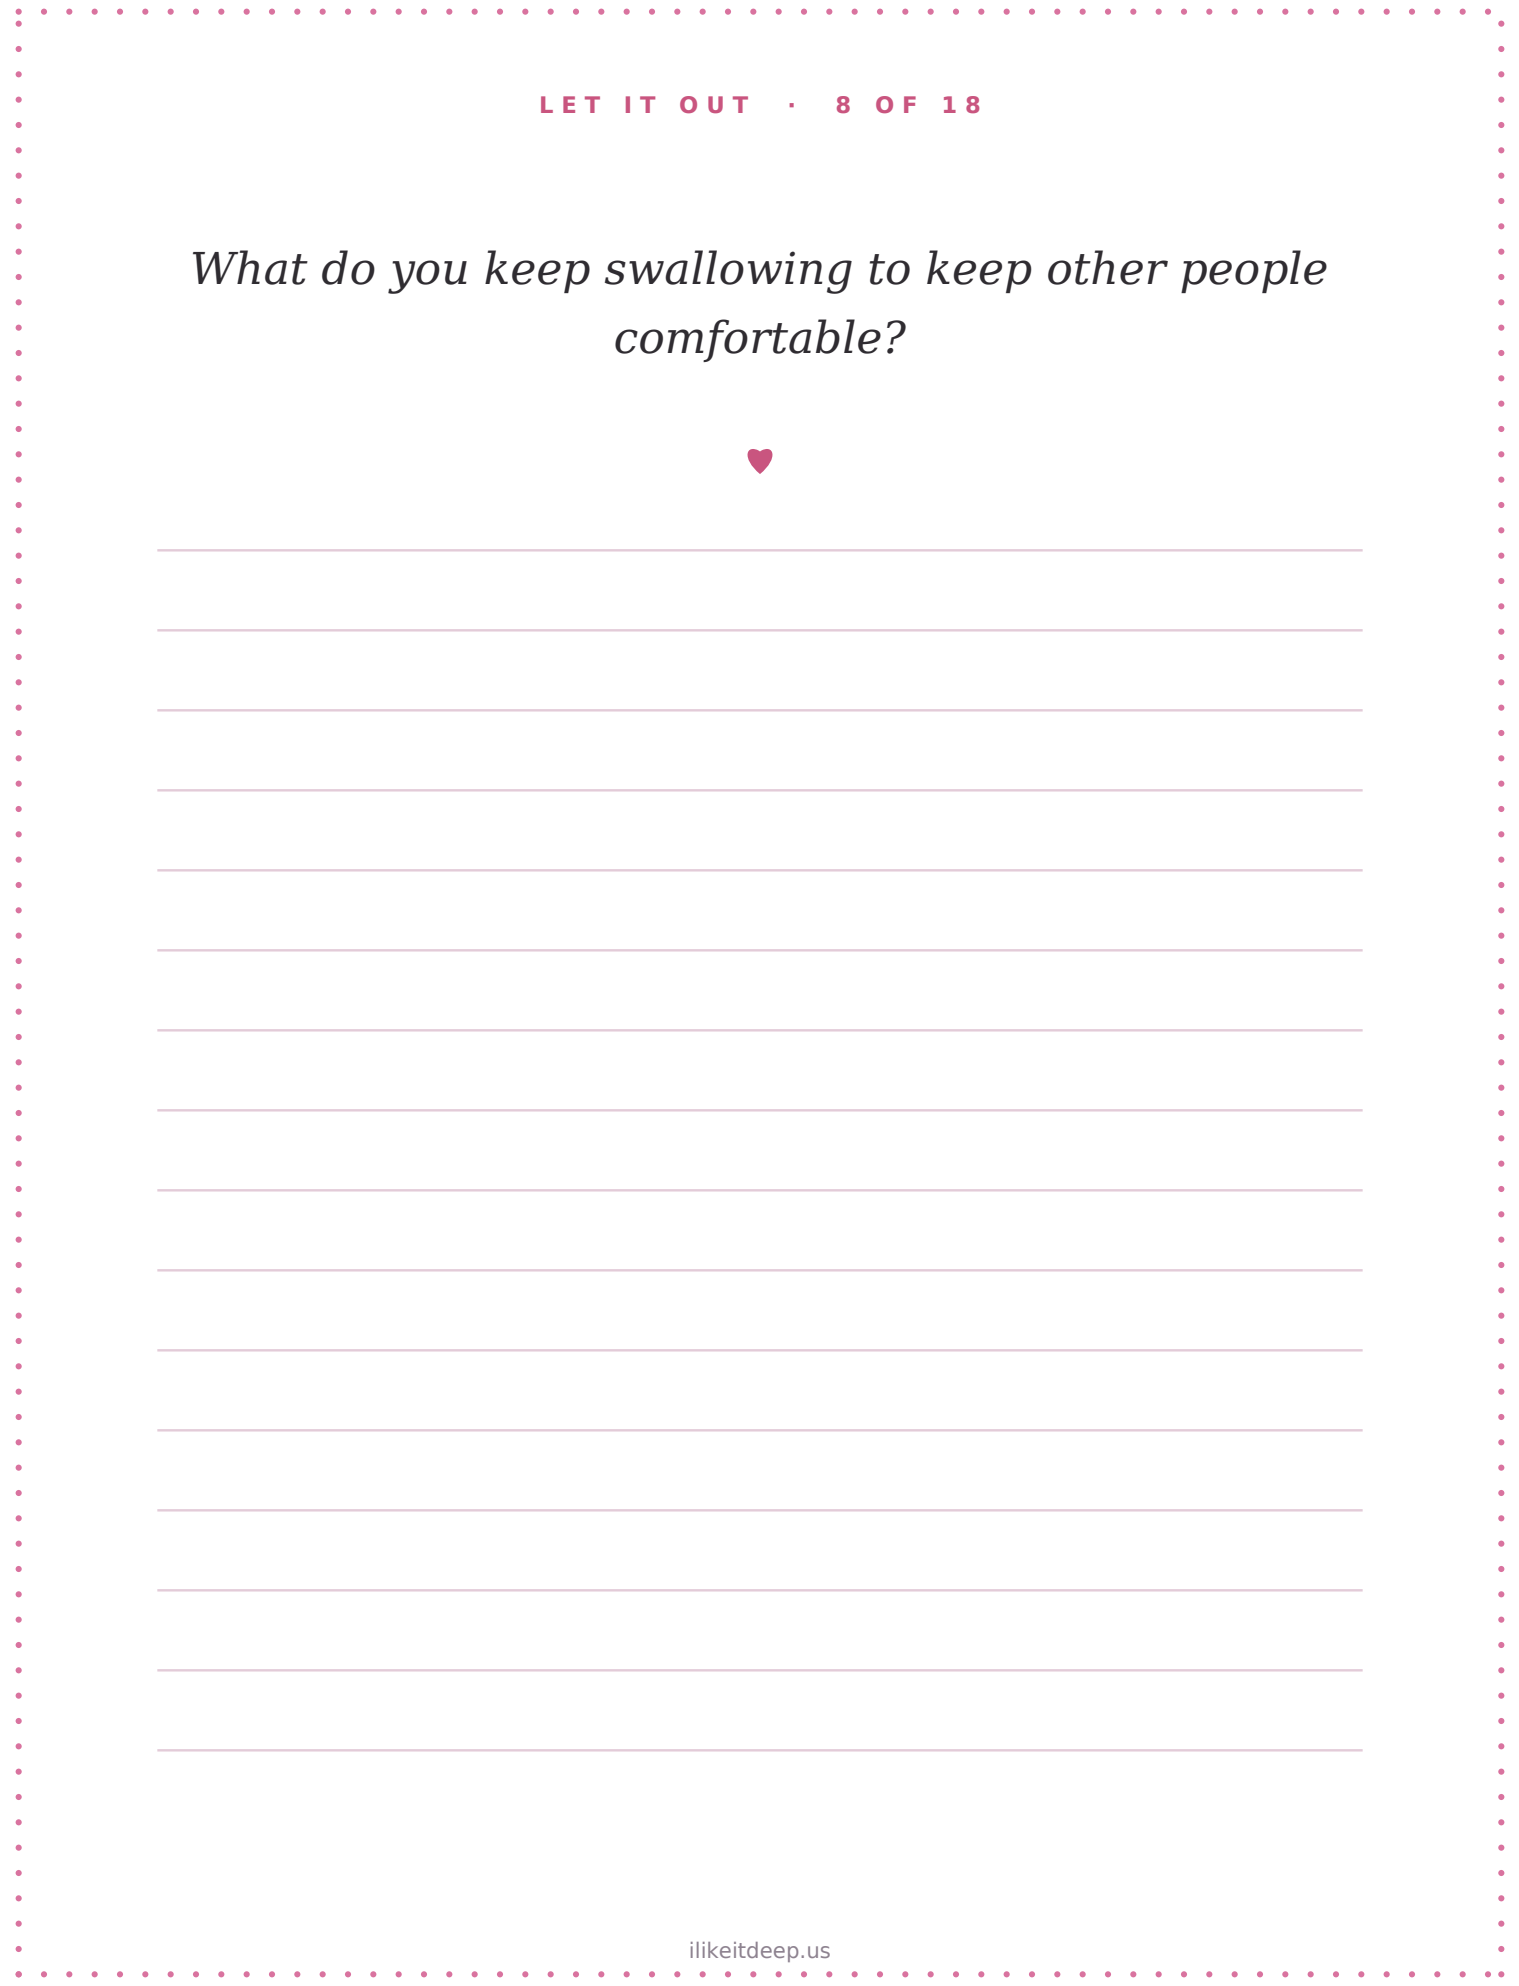

PART TWO

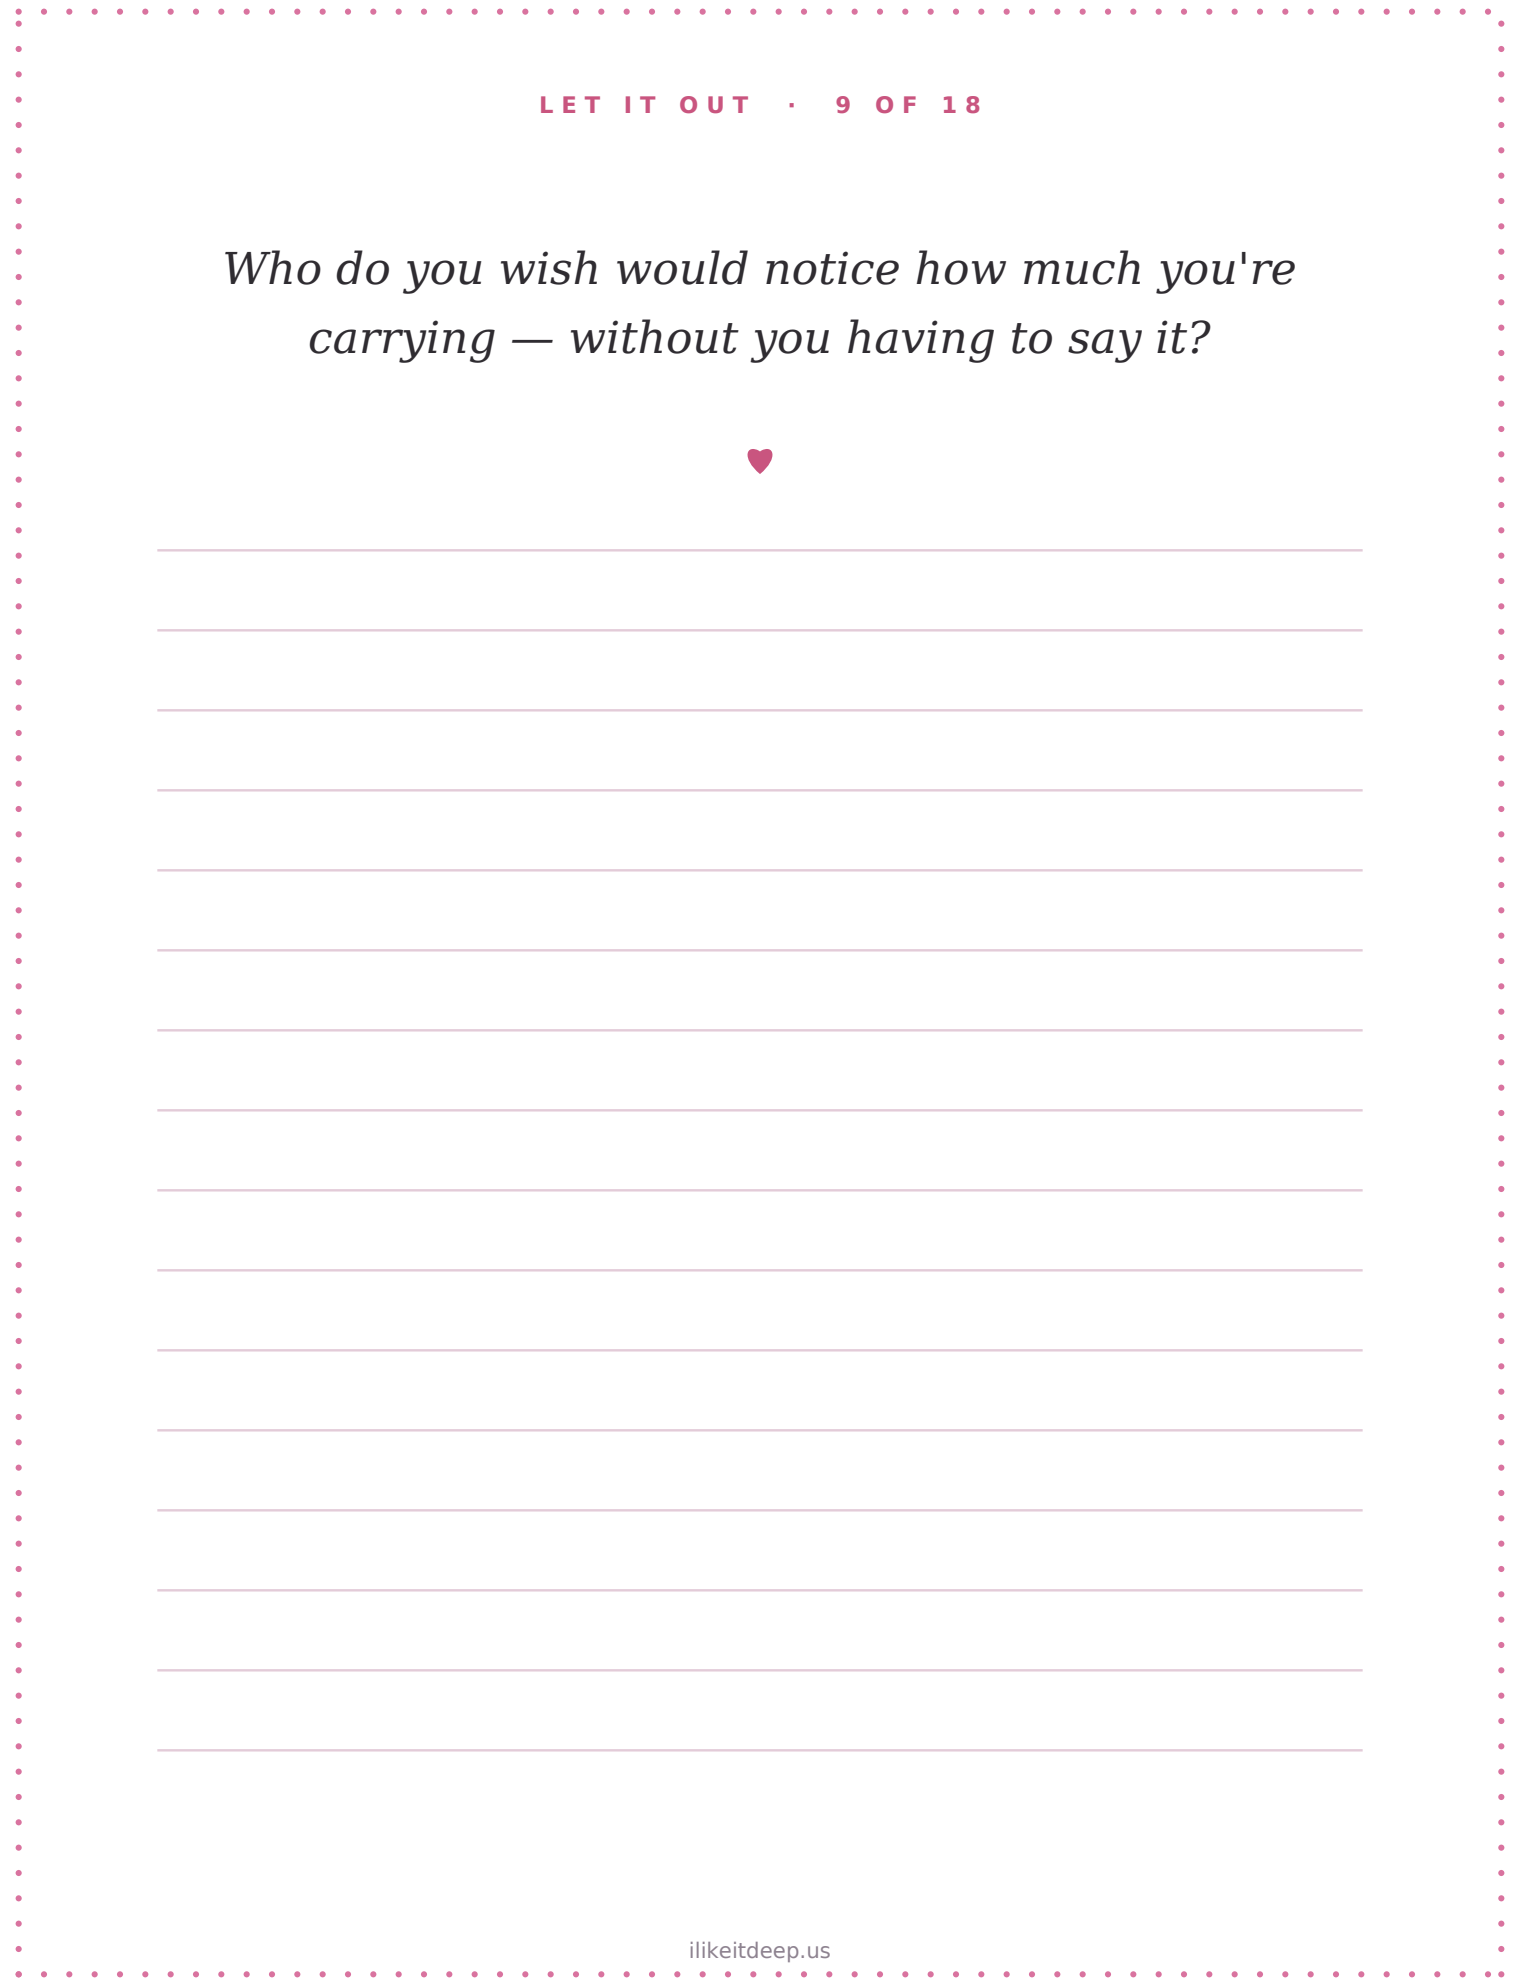

The Stuff Underneath

Under the loud feelings there's usually a quieter, truer one. Go look.

[illegible][illegible]

[illegible][illegible]

[illegible][illegible]

[illegible][illegible]

What's the sentence you can barely write? Try. Even half of it.

If your exhaustion could talk, what would it ask for?

PART THREE

After the Release

Letting it out isn't the end. It's making room for what comes next.

Read back your loudest pages. What actually needs action — and what just needed air?

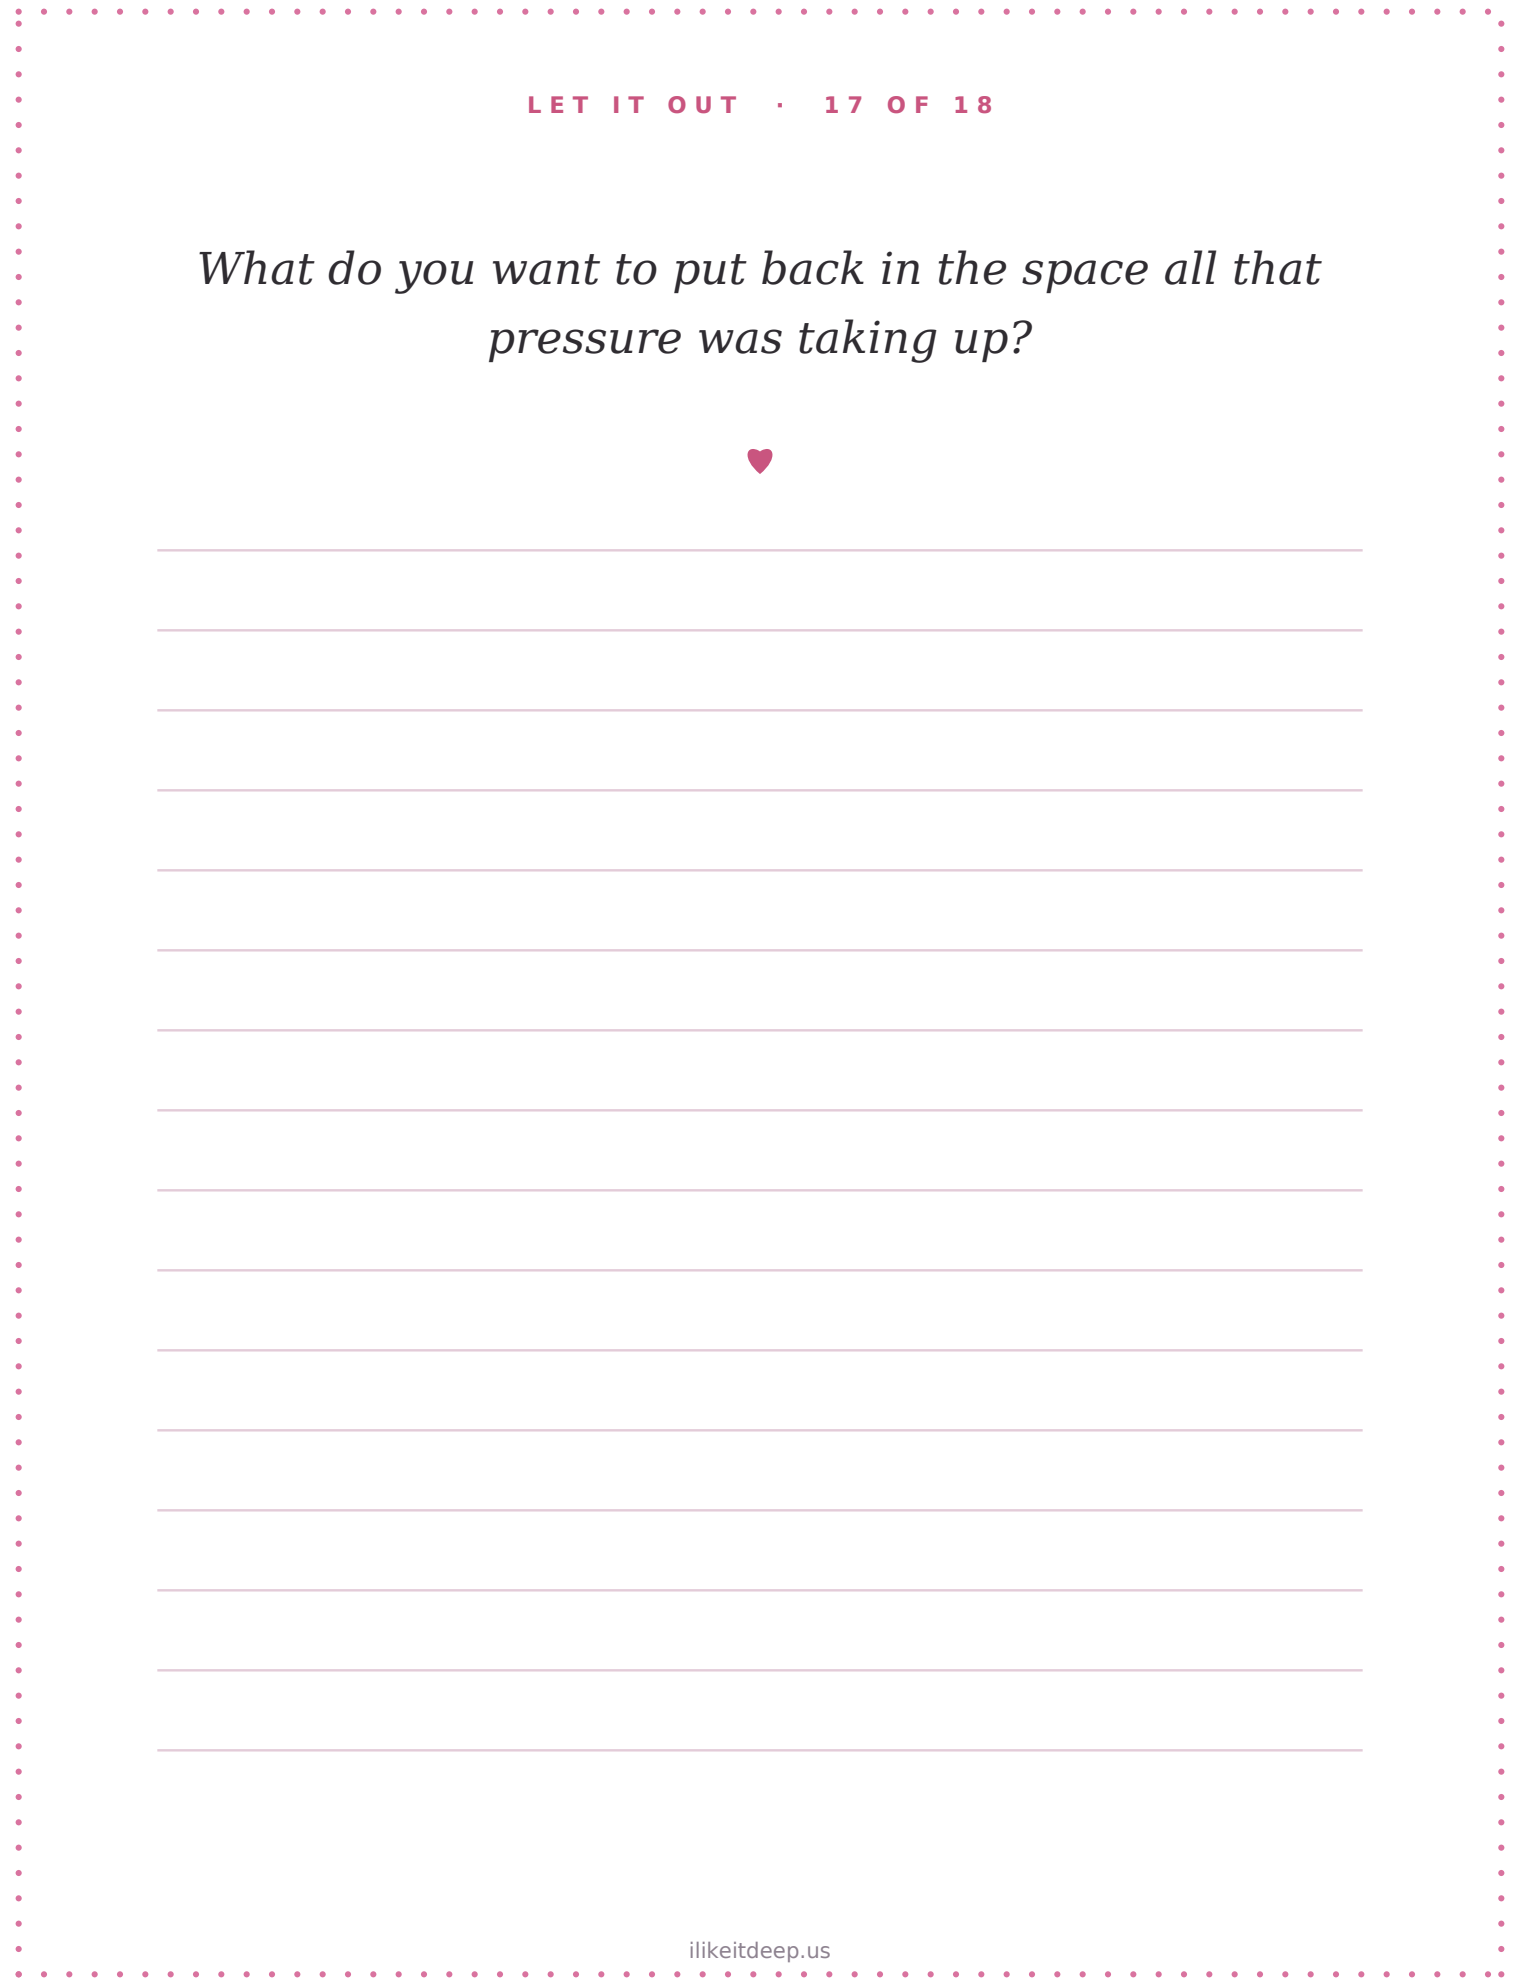

What boundaries would shrink the pile you carry every week?

What healthy releases work for you — writing, walking, crying, music, lifting heavy things? Build your list.

Write yourself permission to feel things fully and early — before they pile up. Your words, your signature.

Ways to Let It Out (That Don't Blow Anything Up)

For when the pressure rises mid-week. Check your go-tos.

- ☐ Rage-write a page here, then close the book
- ☐ Voice memo the rant, then delete it
- ☐ Cry in the shower — water bill worth it
- ☐ Walk fast until the mad runs out
- ☐ Scream into a pillow, zero shame
- ☐ Draft the text, show it to no one
- ☐ Clean something aggressively
- ☐ Loud music, car windows up, full volume
- ☐ Tell ONE safe person the unfiltered version
- ☐ Tear up a page you needed to write but not keep

BONUS · KEEP THIS PAGE

What Got Lighter

After a good release, record what shifted — the sleep that came easier, the shoulders that dropped. Proof that letting it out works.

BEFORE YOU CLOSE THIS JOURNAL

A Note, From One Human to Another

Everything you wrote in here? It was always inside you — taking up room, getting heavier in the dark.

Now it's on paper instead of on your chest.

Keep this journal within reach. Feelings released early are puddles. Feelings held for months become floods.

You're allowed to feel all of it. You always were.

Feelings aren't too much. Holding them alone was.

ilikeitdeep.us · stay deep