

ILIKEITDEEP · A GUIDED JOURNAL

30 Days Food Freedom

A Daily Journal for Making Peace With Food

printable pdf · 30 daily pages · zero diets inside

WELCOME

Before Day One

Let's be clear about what this journal is NOT:
it's not a diet, there are no rules, no numbers,
no foods labeled good or bad, and nothing to earn.

Food freedom means eating without the war —
no guilt tax after meals, no all-day food noise, no punishing, no earning, no starting over Monday.

For 30 days, these pages help you notice your relationship with food gently and without judgment — because peace starts with kind attention, not control.

And truly: if food feels like a battle that's bigger than a journal, a doctor, therapist, or dietitian who gets it can help. Support is part of freedom, not failure.

My 30-Day Intention

What I want my relationship with food to feel like:

The food thoughts I'm most tired of carrying:

How I'll speak to myself this month when it's hard:

Signed, with kindness: _____

30 Days of Peace Talks

A month ago, food might have been a battlefield.
For thirty days you chose a different approach:
attention instead of control, kindness instead of rules.

Peace with food isn't a finish line — it's a relationship you keep tending. But look how differently it feels when nobody's at war.

And remember: extra support is always allowed.
You deserve care, not just willpower.

*Write about your relationship with food now versus day one.
What's softer? What do you want to keep practicing?*

Food was never the enemy. The war is what you gave up.
