

PRINTABLE GUIDED JOURNAL

Who I Used to Be

A journal for grieving the person you left behind

*"Write it. Feel it. Heal it.
Your journal knows the real you."*

I LIKE IT DEEP

A note before you begin

Growth is a good thing — but it's still a loss. The person you used to be, the life you used to have, the version of you that believed certain things or loved certain people — that person doesn't exist anymore, and it's okay to grieve them even while you're glad you've changed.

Who were you five or ten years ago? Describe her honestly, no judgment.

What did she believe about life that you don't believe anymore?

What did she love that you've outgrown?

What was she scared of? What made her feel safe?

What's something she did that you're proud of, even now?

What's something she did that you've forgiven her for?

What moment, season, or realization changed you the most?

What did you have to let go of to become who you are now?

What do you miss about who you used to be, even if you don't want to go back?

What don't you miss at all?

Is there a version of you in between — the one who was already changing but didn't know it yet?

This was me when _____

glue or tape a photo here

A little about this photo:

This was me when _____

glue or tape a photo here

A little about this photo:

This was me when _____

glue or tape a photo here

A little about this photo:

This was me when _____

glue or tape a photo here

A little about this photo:

Write a letter to who you used to be. What would you tell her?

What would you want her to know is coming?

What would you thank her for?

What would you finally let her off the hook for?

What's one thing about who you are now that would surprise her?

What do you want to keep carrying forward from her?

What's one thing you know for sure about who you're becoming?

If she could see you today, what do you think she'd feel?

You don't have to choose between honoring who you were

and being proud of who you've become. Both can be true. She got you here.

I LIKE IT DEEP