The Extended Step-Down Journal for Lasting Change

Your journal knows the real you."*

Before Day One

Thirty days changes a habit. Sixty days changes a lifestyle. This is the long-game version of LESS: same gentle rules — not perfect, not zero, just less — but with enough runway for the new normal to actually become normal. Around week three or four, most people hit the flat middle: the novelty's gone, the finish line's far. That's exactly why this journal exists. The middle is where the real change gets made — and you'll have a page waiting for you every single day of it. If what you're stepping down is something your body leans on hard, bring a doctor into the plan. Sixty days is a journey worth doing safely.

DAY ZERO · MY COMMITMENT

My 60-Day Step-Down Plan

What I'm doing LESS of, in my own words:

Where I'm starting from (my honest current amount):

My why — what less makes room for:

My swap plan — what I'll reach for instead:

Signed by someone playing the long game: _____

Day 1

Did you do less today than you would have a month ago? Any amount counts — log it.

Day 2

What moment today was hardest to hold the line? What was happening around you?

Day 3

What did you reach for instead today — and was it a kind swap or a sneaky trade?

Day 4

What's one time today you noticed the urge and let it pass without acting?

Day 5

Who or what made today easier? Who or what made it harder?

Day 6

What is 'less' giving you back so far — money, mornings, clarity, pride?

Day 7

If you went over today, no shame — what happened, and what's the adjustment for tomorrow?

Day 8

What's the feeling that most often sends you reaching? Name it, and give it one other option.

Day 9

Write a sentence of respect to yourself for showing up on day whatever-this-is.
