I LIKE IT DEEP · A GUIDED JOURNAL

Let It Out

Journal the Things You Feel but Never Say Out Loud

*"Write it. Feel it. Heal it.
Your journal knows the real you."*

W E L C O M E

Before You Begin

You've been holding it together. For work, for family, for the group chat. Smiling with a chest full of things you never let out. This journal is the one place you don't have to hold it. The rules here are gloriously simple: no filter, no fixing, no being fair, no watching your language. The page doesn't need you to be reasonable. It needs you to be honest. Rage, cry, complain, confess. This is the release valve. Let. It. Out.

Don't think — just dump. Write everything sitting on your chest right now, in whatever order it comes out. Messy counts double.

PART ONE

The Pressure

First, admit how much you've been carrying. All of it. Out loud, on paper.

What are you SO tired of? Start every line with 'I'm tired of...' and don't stop until you're empty.

One page at a time.

Who or what is currently on your last nerve — and what would you say if there were zero consequences?

Be gentle with you.

What would you scream from a rooftop if screaming were allowed? Write it in big letters if you need to.

This is brave work.

The Stuff Underneath

Under the loud feelings there's usually a quieter, truer one. Go look.

When you sit with the anger for a minute — what's underneath it? Hurt?
Fear? Exhaustion? Being unseen?

Softness is allowed.

Who do you wish would notice how much you're carrying — without you having to say it?

You're allowed to heal.

After the Release

Letting it out isn't the end. It's making room for what comes next.

Read back your loudest pages. What actually needs action — and what just needed air?

One page at a time.

Ways to Let It Out (That Don't

- ☐ Blow Anything Up)
- ☐ For when the pressure rises mid-week. Check your go-tos.
- ☐ Rage-write a page here, then close the book
- ☐ Voice memo the rant, then delete it
- ☐ Cry in the shower — water bill worth it
- ☐ Walk fast until the mad runs out
- ☐ Scream into a pillow, zero shame
- ☐ Draft the text, show it to no one
- ☐ Clean something aggressively
- ☐ Loud music, car windows up, full volume
- ☐ Tell ONE safe person the unfiltered version
- ☐ Tear up a page you needed to write but not keep

A Note, From One Human to Another

Everything you wrote in here? It was always inside you — taking up room, getting heavier in the dark. Now it's on paper instead of on your chest. Keep this journal within reach. Feelings released early are puddles. Feelings held for months become floods. You're allowed to feel all of it. You always were.

Feelings aren't too much. Holding them alone was.
