An Inner Child Journal for Healing What Your Younger

*"Write it. Feel it. Heal it.
Your journal knows the real you."*

Before You Begin

Somewhere inside you is the child you used to be — still carrying what she was handed, still hoping someone will finally come back for her. This journal is how you go back for her. Take it slowly. One question at a time. If a page stirs up more than you expected, that's not failure — that's the point of the work. Pause, breathe, and return when you're ready. Some of these pages touch old wounds. If the heavy ones feel too big to hold alone, a therapist or counselor is a beautiful companion for inner child work. You deserve that.

Picture yourself as a child — a specific age, a specific place. Describe little you: what they wore, what they loved, what their days looked like.

PART ONE

Meeting Her Again

You can't heal a child you refuse to look at. Start by simply remembering.

ilikeitdeep.us

What was your role in your family — the good one, the quiet one, the strong one, the invisible one?

You showed up. That counts.

What did little you want to be when they grew up — and what did they really want from that dream?

This is brave work.

What She Needed

Naming what was missing is not blaming. It's understanding.

When you were sad or scared as a kid, what happened? Who came — and who didn't?

Keep going, gently.

If you could go back to one hard moment and sit beside little you, which moment would it be — and what would you do?

You're doing the work.

Reparenting Her Now

You are now the adult in the room. And you get to do it differently.

What does little you still flinch about — criticism, raised voices, being left out — and how does it show up in your adult life?

One page at a time.

What childhood joy could you give back to yourself this month — playing, creating, being silly?

There's no rush here.

Small Ways to Show Up for Her

Reparenting isn't one big moment — it's tiny promises kept. Check what you're willing to try.

- ☐ Keep one small promise to yourself today
- ☐ Buy or make the snack little you loved
- ☐ Say no to something without over-explaining
- ☐ Rest without earning it first
- ☐ Do something playful with zero purpose
- ☐ Speak to yourself in a voice you'd use with a child
- ☐ Look at an old photo of yourself with kindness
- ☐ Let yourself cry if it comes — no apology
- ☐ Celebrate something small out loud
- ☐ Ask for help with one thing this week

A Note, From One Human to Another

You just did something most people avoid their whole lives: you turned around and faced the child you were. Be patient with yourself in the days after this work. Old feelings may surface at odd moments. Let them. They waited a long time for permission. And if the wounds you found here feel deep, please know that inner child work is even more powerful with a therapist beside you. Getting support isn't weakness — it's reparenting too.

She waited a long time for you. You came back.
